A Review of Traffic Congestion Prediction Using Artificial Intelligence

The predictive abilities of AI are one of huge benefit to traffic management system as they are able to recognize the physical environment conditions that can lead to or be a result of heavier traffic flow and congestion.

As an example of this, traffic prediction systems which use AI to predict traffic conditions in real-time can help traffic management systems to adjust traffic lights and road closures in this manner. This could help to reduce traffic congestion and improve traffic flow.

New techniques for data acquisition and processing are transforming the way civil and environmental systems are monitored, understood and managed.

New science is emerging from this unprecedented amount of available data.

Engineers are tasked with selecting and integrating sensors, interpreting heterogeneous data merging physical and statistical information, developing ways to communicate the results, and applying the outcomes to improve our systems.

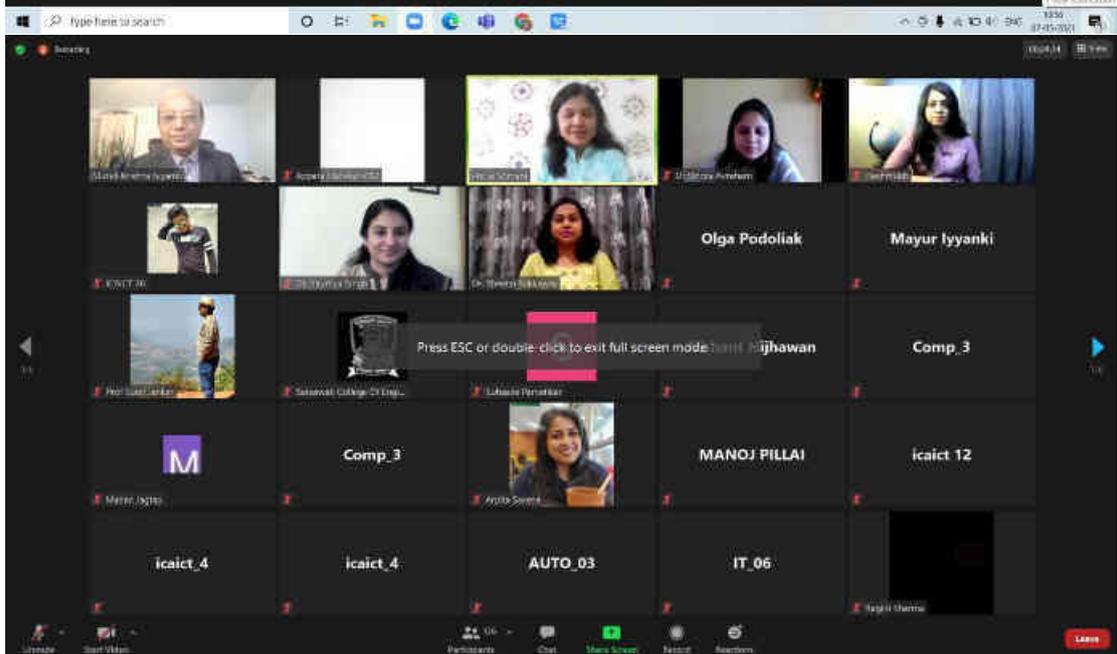

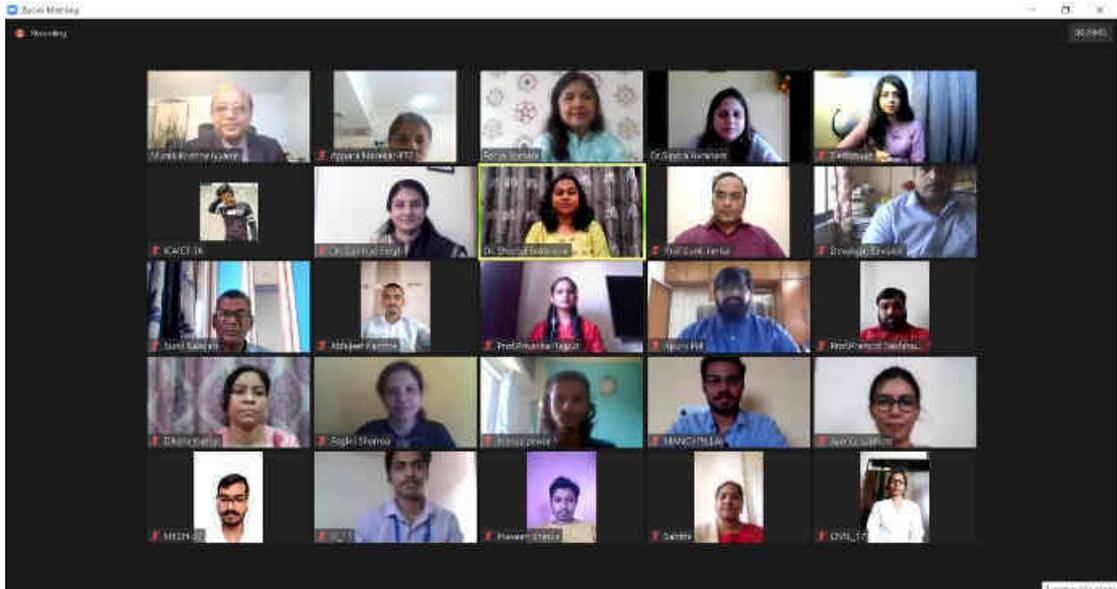

Students need to pursue Civil and Environmental Engineering Data Analytics to explore the entire data life-cycle related to CEE systems, from data acquisition to analysis and application.
